While the Court makes every effort to maintain the accuracy of this information, there may be other organisations which provide free or low cost advice and information.

Family Relationship Advice Line - 1800 050 321

This is a national telephone service that provides information and referral to services that can help and strengthen relationships, overcome relationship difficulties or deal with separation. Services are focused on putting children first and resolving disputes without going to court. You will be able to talk to someone who can help you work out what information, support and services you need.

You can also obtain information about dispute resolution services at the Family Relationships online website.

Legal Aid Specialist Services:

Domestic Violence Legal Unit

Telephone: 9261 6288

Legal Aid WA's Family Court Services Unit provides a Duty Lawyer service at the Family Court of WA, Monday to Friday, from 9:00am to 4:00pm. Family Court Services provides free legal advice to self-represented litigants in relation to their parenting matters and provides FASS (Family Advocacy and Support Services) in WA. The Duty Lawyer can represent parties in court on a one-off basis (if they are able to) and, in some cases, can assist with the preparation of urgent applications. There is also an on-site social support worker who can provide associated non-legal support for families experiencing family violence.
